John goes to Entropy to buy some groceries.

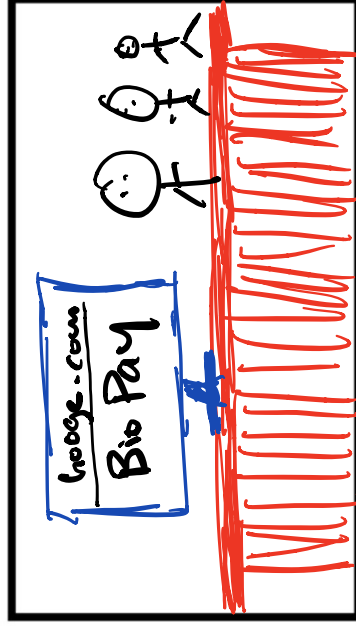

Meanwhile, the manager, Alex, wants to process the customer's faster to more quickly make money.

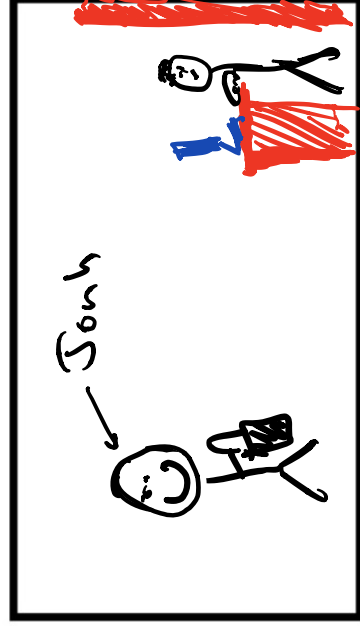

By the time John gets to the front, he is able to enroll himself in the service and then pay.

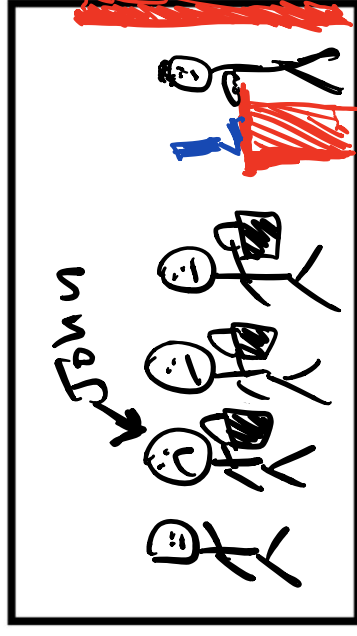

He gets in the checkout line to pay for his items.

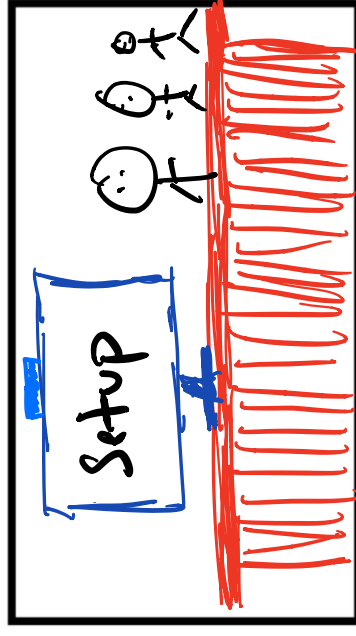

Alex looks for some solutions online, and comes across BioPay.

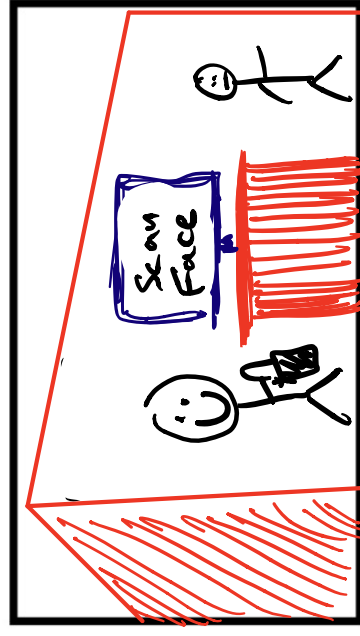

A few days later, Alex comes back and he doesn't see any line.

After 10 minutes of waiting in line John is getting impatient.

He quickly installs the software on his computer and sets it up.

John walks up to the cashier and scans his face, and walks out the door, happy.
