John goes to Entropy to buy some groceries.

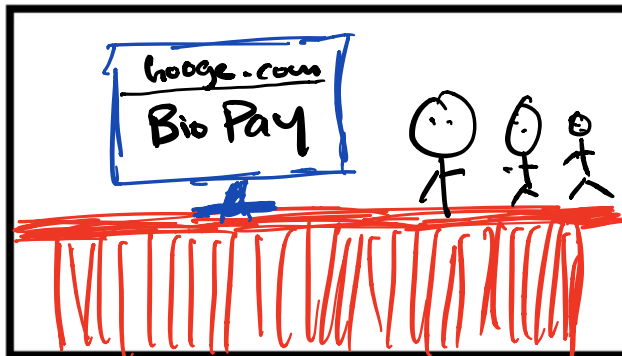

He gets in the checkout line to pay for his items.

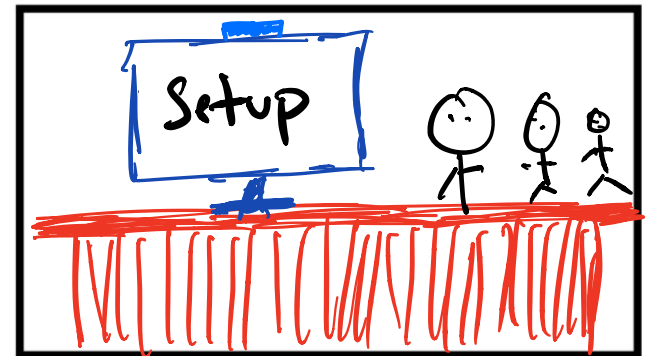

After 10 minutes of waiting in line John is getting impatient.

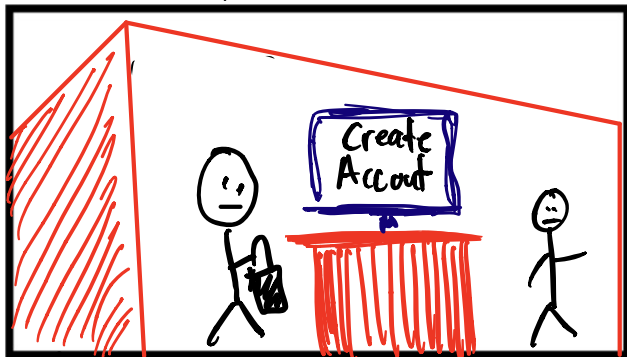

Meanwhile, the manager, Alex, wants to process the customers faster to more quickly make money.

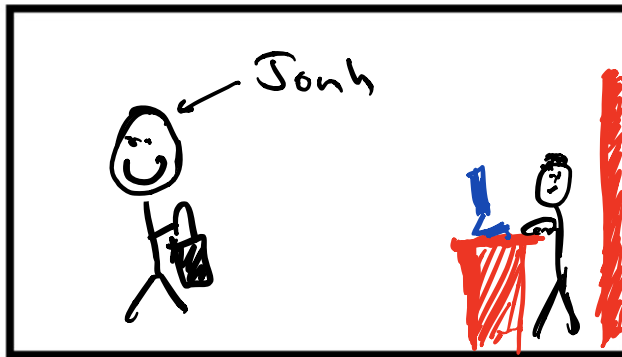

Alex looks for some solutions online, and comes across BioPay.

He quickly installs the software on his computer and sets it up.

By the time John gets to the front, he is able to enroll himself in the service and then pay.

A few days later, Alex comes back and he doesn't see any line.

John walks up to the cashier and scans his face, and walks out the door, happy.
